Volunteers Clean Up the RiNo Art District

DENVER – On Saturday, the RiNo Art District teamed up with DRiNK RiNo to organize a community clean-up day, with over 125 volunteers showing up ready to clean. The clean-up day, sponsored by the City of Denver’s Keep Denver Beautiful program, ran from 9 AM to noon, with volunteers picking up trash district-wide. Volunteers were divided into zones, and collectively cleaned up both trash and recycling in the district.

To reward them for their generous time and effort, multiple local businesses organized to provide breakfast, lunch, water, and snacks to volunteers. Additionally, DRiNK RiNo members provided a select number of free beverages at their member breweries, wineries, distilleries, and cideries to volunteers after the clean-up. In addition to food, construction companies currently working in the RiNo Art District also stepped up to provide dumpsters and trash pick-up after the event.

The RiNo Art District has seen a surge of development in recent years, and with it an influx of both residents and visitors. While the clean-up day is a short-term effort to remedy the district-wide trash and litter within the public realm, the Art District is also working on a long-term more sustainable solution to keep trash off the streets.

As the community continues to grow, volunteers seemed excited to give back to their community and clean up a place they either live or visit often. QUOTE. This event is just one of many where local businesses, residents, property owners, and community members came together to improve the community in which they live, work, and play.
